

August 13, 2007

Ten Great Strollers That Cost Less Than $250

A Top-Notch Stroller Doesn't Have to Break the Bank

Strollers have come a long way in recent years, from clunky, hard-to-steer monstrosities to lightweight, zippy all-terrain machines. Generally, the research and features that go into modern strollers means they carry a heftier price tag. These ten strollers have tons of convenience features and come from well-known manufacturers, but cost less than $250. So you can have a fabulous ride for your baby without sacrificing the college fund.

Baby Planet Solo Sport Stroller

Baby Planet is a newcomer in the stroller industry, but this company is quickly becoming known as a winner for easy-steering, well-built strollers. The Solo Sport comes in at under $200, but still manages to retain the convenience features and sturdiness of a more expensive stroller. The reclining seat makes this stroller suitable for babies 3 months and up, and the generous 55 pound weight limit means you can easily use the Solo Sport through the toddler years. This stroller weighs just over 17 pounds and folds super-small, just like an umbrella stroller. A large basket under the seat can hold plenty of baby and parent gear. The adjustable foot-rest is nice for long-legged toddlers, too.