

Strollerqueen!

NEW NEW NEWS!

August 2007

2007 was a very good year for double strollers. This is the latest one to arrive on the market, the very cool Baby Planet Unity Sport. It has the same curved profile that I really liked on the Solo, but completes the look with the rounded handle. It is padded with foam, so it is comfortable to push. What's nice is that tall people can push from the top, and shorter people can push from the bottom. Oh, and check out the cupholders on the handle!

The color combo is very stylish. It's called "Red Tech." An appropriate name for a "tech-y" stroller! Another original feature is the smaller set of wheels in the center, to avoid long striders from kicking the back. The seat has a pretty decent recline, and extendable leg rests.

The seat reclines by the use of a back buckle strap. It's pretty easy to do. The company advises that you can use the Unity Sport for a child three months old, to 55 pounds. Big span!

As you can see, the baskets are a really good size, larger than of it's counterparts. The fold is pretty typical for an umbrella stroller. Kick down the right side latch, kick up the two bottom center round pieces. It has two self-locking latches on the side that really keep it closed tightly.

All in all, it's a pretty versatile double. It's compact enough for travel, or to keep in the car. While the wheels are not A/T, they do have shocks, so they perform pretty well on cracked sidewalks. The canopy is a good size, with a rain visor, so it's not a bad choice for moderate outdoor use. www.baby-planet.com
